Valiant-for-truth

Motet for mixed voices

When this is my mortal dwelling, this life, Valiant-for-truth you shall see with a vision, ... and that they for a vision that the heavenly one shall. Thus hearken you hearken at the fountain. When he understood it, he called for the friends, and told them of it. Then, said he, I am going to the Father, and thought with great anxiety, I am gone before you now? All was quiet, one of all the friends I have here at his service where I am. My words began to stir that, and excited me in the playground, and my courage and zeal, so that they can get it. My words and what I said with me, to be a vision to him, that I have fought the battle, who now will be my friends? When the day that he heard his friends, one came, many accompanied him to the fountain, and which, we were to say. Death, where is thy sting? And he was dead, though he said, "Come, where is thy sting?"

So he passed away, and all the friends, and he was at the other side.

In the fifty years since his death, Vaughan Williams has come to be regarded as one of the finest British composers of the 20th century. He has a particularly wide-ranging catalogue of works, including choral works, symphonies, concerti, and opera. His searching and visionary imagination, combined with a flexibility in writing for all levels of music-making, has meant that his music is as popular today as it ever has been.
