Synopsis

"Fascinating... a regular field manual... meticulously researched and very entertaining." --G. Gordon Liddy

A thoroughly revised and updated edition of the essential guide to preserving your personal security. From cyberspace to crawl spaces, new innovations in information gathering have left the private life of the average person open to scrutiny, and worse, exploitation. In this thoroughly updated third edition of his immensely popular guide How to Be Invisible, J.J. Luna shows you how to protect your home address, hide your ownership of vehicles and real estate, use pagers with dumbphones, switch to low-profile banking and invisible money transfers, use alternate signatures, and how to secretly run a home-based business. J.J. Luna is an expert and highly trained security consultant with years of experience protecting himself, his family, and his clients. Using real life stories and his own consulting experience, J.J. Luna divulges legal methods to attain the privacy you crave and deserve, whether you want to shield yourself from casual scrutiny or take your life savings with you and disappear without a trace. Whatever your needs, Luna reveals the shocking secrets that private detectives and other seekers of personal information use to uncover information and then shows how to make a serious commitment to safeguarding yourself. There is a prevailing sense in our society that true privacy is a thing of the past. In a world where privacy concerns that only continue to grow in magnitude, How to Be Invisible, Third Edition is a critical antidote to the spread of new and more efficient ways of undermining our personal security. Contrary to some misconceptions, it's not only criminals that need to hide. Not just abuse victims, either! Fraudulent lawsuits, unethical private investigators, injury lawsuits, mistaken identities, other corporate mistakes, and an overbearing, big-brother, growing Marxist government are all good reasons you may want to hide your address or the ownership of some or all of your property/assets. This person states his background from the beginning (living and doing "illegal" business under Generalissimo Francisco Franco, then becoming a P.I.) and that his book will cover things many people will agree on to things most consider extreme. But he makes good points for ALL of this when he relates stories regarding himself and also clients. You wouldn't believe the things a P.I. will do for money, and that most of them will look the other way for the right price, even if they should be suspicious of the person hiring them (abusers claiming their victim owes them money). They do many underhanded things to trick people into violating your safety and giving information they otherwise wouldn't. All this must be thought about when trying to hide ANYTHING, for ANY reason. One of the best stories is how he THANKFULLY avoided a FALSE lawsuit related to a shopping cart, after observing a cart hit a car, merely because he had a fancy (e.g. "rich") car, though he did not use a shopping cart himself. Because the car was "owned" by an LLC, the person who threatened him wasn't able to find out who owned the car (if he even tried). He is also honest about the limits of concealment. For example, all you chain mailbox stores, and the post office, regularly provide a list of all clients, present and past, to the government. But with Mr Luna's expert experience, he can guide you in choosing how far you need to go, and what will be required, as well as what you can reasonably expect...WHO you can hide from, and who might find you.This is definitely a book written by an expert, in plain language for the newly paranoid. You should expect that you may not want to take all the steps suggested in this book...or maybe you will. That's the beauty of it!

Read all of the positive reviews, this book will not disappoint you. This is the 2012 edition and much has changed in the world, however you will still find a lot of useful information. I've personally learned a few things and to me,any increase in knowledge is both a positive gain and a beneficial life enhancement, and therefore worth the price.

Let's get a couple things straight. There are a good number of people who assume that you need to be on the run from the law or on some sort of terrorist watchlist to buy a book called "How to Be Invisible". That's clear just from the reviews of the second edition of this book. And some over-the-top, exuberant reviews of this new edition, bordering on gospel, don't help either. The fact is, there are dozens of examples throughout this book of ordinary, law-abiding citizens who have put Jack Luna's principles into practice, and have come out the better for it, for an endless variety of reasons. And there are many people alive today who are kicking themselves for not putting those principles into their lives. The title is misleading. You don't have to make yourself "invisible" to gain wisdom from this book and apply it to your daily life. Luna outlines simple precautions, costing virtually nothing, that will give you more privacy than 99 percent of the population. But if you want to burn your bridges and make your tracks a memory, the tools are there. And if the principles in the book are fully implemented, you'll give the best PIs in the country a run for their money."But if you don't have anything to hide, why should you worry?"Ah, the age-old retort. Nothing to hide? Good for you! But think for a second -- is there anything in your house or on your computer that you wouldn't want splayed across the front page of the New York Times? And that's not a rhetorical question. Not a week goes by without the contents of someone's life published in the newspapers and online, from a false arrest or an innocent mix-up, or even good news like winning the lottery. Anything from the contents of your liquor cabinet to your prescription bottles to your guns to those steamy adult sites in your web history to the Jesus print hanging on your wall can be used to paint a picture of you, if you're the victim of some innocent mistake. The principles in this book can make it almost impossible for such a mistake to occur in the first place. I gave this book 4 stars because I would have liked to have seen more on computer security. There are easy and free ways to protect your computer and Internet connection from anyone from your curious toddler, to the nosy neighbor stealing your wifi, to the federales themselves. There are two chapters on computer and Internet security, with an emphasis on social networking such as Facebook, but most of it is common-sense Internet Safety 101 that every teenager should know. There could be some more details on protecting your computer, as it's every bit as important as protecting your home. Nonetheless, this is a minor quibble, and it doesn't take away from the fact that this book is useful to almost anyone who is looking to take control of their personal lives. Hats off to Jack Luna for a useful, comprehensive, and eminently readable book. This third edition is still, rightfully, the standard in its field.

Big Brother really is watching us everywhere these days. This book shows ways to stay under the radar.

Picked this book up on a recommendation from Frank Ahern's How to Disappear, and found it an overall superior choice - a very interesting read on how to keep or reclaim your privacy. It's imprudent to let so much true information about yourself remain readily accessible to prying hands and J.J. Luna will show you both why and how to undo the damage. Definitely recommended, especially to the "I've got nothing to hide" folks, to whom this may be a shocking eye-opener on all the ways they make themselves needlessly vulnerable.
